Include also money held in the name of an institution other than the library if allocations to the library can be reported on a fiscal basis.

2. Sources of income from public funds.
   a. Include income from any level of public government, from taxes or from other funds available to such a government, including research grants and other contractual commitments.
   b. Contractual income.
      List sources and amounts derived from publicly funded agencies, such as the National Science Foundation, Higher Education Act Grants, from other federal research grants, or from other public educational institutions.
   c. Indirect contractual income.
      Report amounts and/or percentages allocated to library operations and overhead from grants received by the clientele which it serves.

3. Other income.
   Include the sum total of income from vending machines, fines, publications, sales of discarded books, or from rental books.

   If the figures supplied by the supporting institutions are not to be published, provision should be made for this request. Derived statistics should not be reported unless no others can be produced.

   If percentage figures are used, however, define the total institutional budget as 100% and each of the above elements as a percentage thereof.

   To reconcile the budget reports of libraries whose accounting procedures differ in placing money for books and other library materials, money which is specifically allocated for this purpose should be reported separately under “Library Materials.” It can then be added to income for operation or income for capital according to local procedure.

   This initial attempt at reporting on a national basis will benefit
   a. future programming for libraries
   b. legislative bodies in future allocation, and
   c. donors who will better understand how these funds are used.

BOOK MOVE AT FORT LEWIS

Fort Lewis College recently completed a new million dollar library-classroom building and was faced with the problem of moving over thirty-five thousand volumes of books in the middle of a trimester without disrupting the use of the library by students any longer than necessary. Thus, at 8:30 a.m. on March 20, over one thousand students and faculty assembled at the old library and the move began. Wahleah Lujan, a student at Fort Lewis College when she was named Miss Indian America, was on the campus Thursday-Saturday to participate in the annual Hohzoni Days (Beautiful Days) activities sponsored by the College’s Shalako Indian Club. She decided to stay over and help her fellow students move the books. Chad and Jeremy, singing duo from England, who were to present a concert that evening, also decided to join the Fort Lewis students in the book move.

At noon an old fashioned “Chuck Wagon” feed was spread out for the students in front of the new library and a local band provided the music for the “Book Moving Day.”

By 1:30 p.m., when the last of the students and faculty had had their plates filled at the Chuck Wagon, the library had been moved intact, with the books taken from the shelves in order in one building and put on the shelves in order in the new building. Formal dedication ceremonies for the library were combined with the college’s commencement exercises on April 16.
