E. Dale Cluff has been appointed director of library services at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale. He was previously assistant director for information and instructional services, University of Utah Library.

Cluff joined the University of Utah staff in 1968 and served as assistant engineering reference librarian, head of the Monographs Order Division, and head of the Library Media Services Department before being appointed assistant director for information and instructional services in 1976.

Cluff received his undergraduate degree, with a major in English, in 1967, the master of science degree in librarianship from the University of Washington in 1978, and his Ph.D. degree in educational administration and educational media from the University of Utah in 1976. He has served as vice-president and president of the Utah Library Association, as a member of committees on micropublishing and the reproduction of library materials in the Resources and Technical Services Division of the American Library Association, and as a member of the Advisory Committee of the Utah Governor’s Conference on Library Information and Services. He received the Distinguished Service Award of the College and University Section of the Utah Library Association in 1979.

In his new position at Southern Illinois University Cluff will report to Kenneth G. Peterson, dean of library affairs. Library Services is one of five administrative units reporting to the dean of library affairs at Southern Illinois University–Carbondale; others include the Learning Resources Service, Special Collections, the Center for Dewey Studies, and the Papers of Ulysses S. Grant Editorial Project.

Pantano received his bachelor’s degree in English from St. Anselm’s College, and after graduate work at the University of New Hampshire, received his master’s degree in library science from the University of Rhode Island. He was a recipient of a Ford Fellowship from the University of New Hampshire, the F. Mahel Winchell Scholarship from the New Hampshire Library Association, and the Mildred P. McKay Scholarship from the New Hampshire Trustees’ Association.

Pantano is a member of the New Hampshire, New England, and American Library associations, the Bibliographic Instruction Section of ACRL, and the ACRL New England Chapter.

Lillie S. Parker, associate university librarian since 1968, has been appointed university librarian at California State University, Fresno. Parker joined the library staff in 1951 as a member of the Catalog Department. She later worked in the Circulation Department, then served as head of the Catalog Department and as assistant university librarian before becoming associate university librarian.

She received her bachelor of arts and bachelor... of library science degrees from the University of California, Berkeley, where she was graduated with honors in 1950. She received a scholarship in French and was an alumni scholar while at Berkeley.

Joseph A. Rosenthal has been named head of the five-million-volume library at the University of California, Berkeley. He had been the acting head of Berkeley’s twenty-branch library system since the summer of 1978, when Richard M. Dougherty resigned.

The Berkeley campus library is ranked among the top five university libraries in the United States. Serving 29,000 students and 2,000 faculty, it circulates nearly two million items a year.

Rosenthal began working in the library while a student at Dickinson College (Pennsylvania), where he earned his bachelor’s degree in 1949, and later at Pennsylvania State University, where he received a master’s degree in political science. After earning a master’s in library science at Columbia, he interned in the Library of Congress.

Starting as a reference librarian, Rosenthal worked for fifteen years in the New York Public Library. He was head of technical services in the four-million-volume Research Libraries at New York Public when he left for Berkeley at the end of 1970.

As head of technical services on the Berkeley campus, he helped bring computerization to the library and network links to libraries at other University of California campuses, Stanford, and other institutions. The new university librarian is responsible for a $14-million budget and a career staff of 420.

Rupert C. Woodward, university librarian, George Washington University, Washington, D.C., has retired. Woodward had served as university librarian at George Washington since 1967. During his tenure a new University Library building was completed.

Woodward earned B.S. degrees in social studies and library science and an M.A. degree in history. He began his career as assistant cataloger at the University of Alabama, where he advanced to order librarian. He worked as a librarian in Guatemala, Argentina, and Costa Rica from 1950 to 1954. From 1954 until 1963 he served as chief acquisitions librarian at the Louisiana State University Library in Baton Rouge, and from 1963 until 1966 he was associate library director at Texas A & M University Library.

THE CONFERENCE REPORT AS A LITERARY FORM

A standard feature of library newsletters is the conference or workshop report written for the folks back home by a library staff member or newsletter editor. We have all read (and some of us have written) such reports. The newsletter of the Northwestern University Library recently printed a conference report by one “L. C. Dewey” that spoofs the genre delightfully.

“At the end of last month,” the report begins, “I struck off for Newark, New Jersey, to attend the fourth annual Conference on Mouse and Rodent Related Problems in University and Research Libraries (COMARPURL). The attractions of the conference, aside from its location, included the chance to make friends, enjoy refreshments provided by exhibitors, and, of course, hear papers of interest.

“A very interesting paper was presented during the Historical Aspects of the Rodent Problem panel session. In ‘Contemporary Evidence of the Mouse Problem in Fifteenth Century Libraries: The Mus Musculus MS of Jean le Malchanceux’, the author ably used both a neglected literary source and physical evidence to push the awareness of the mouse problem back fully 100 years earlier than hitherto suspected.

“Another paper examined statistical aspects of the problem: ‘Sampling Problems and the Stochastic Modeling of Library Mouse Populations.’ The author of the paper obtained an accurate estimate of the rodent population in a library building by first selecting more than 1,000 random one-minute time intervals and then enlisting the aid of library staff and student assistants to keep a close watch for mice during those intervals. The carefully coded returns made it possible to state with a high degree of confidence that the visible mouse population was .0009 mice. Using this data the author expects to develop a time-series-oriented model of the growth and decline of the total mouse population of the library. This, of course, will have applications in other libraries and archives, and much interest was expressed during the discussion period.

“For the first time this year COMARPURL took on an international flavor with the participation of rodent experts from libraries and archives outside North America. Herr Wanley of the Staatsarchiv Hanover gave a paper on ‘Prospects in Unorthodox Rodent Control Techniques’ which stressed the importance of new techniques in the area of psycho-control, especially through the use of portable variable tone generating equipment. Unfortunately a much anticipated paper on ‘Non-toxic and Environmentally Sound Rodent Control Techniques: The Use of Natural Predators in an Academic Library’ was not presented, as the author suffered a tragic accident while handling his demonstration materials. Fortunately his assistant is responding to treatment well and may have the method perfected and ready for presentation next year.

“As all things must, the conference came to an end and the delegates parted having gained new friends and ideas, and already looking forward to next year’s meeting.”

Cost and Time Data for Libraries Wanted

The Library Management Research Unit at Loughborough University is reviewing cost and time data relating to library and information service operations. The object of the review is to locate existing cost and time data, to assess the coverage of topics, to identify gaps in that coverage, and to make a critical appraisal of methods for obtaining cost data. Ultimately the unit would like to develop and publish a manual on library costs, times, and costing methods. The unit would be pleased to hear from library and information service managers who have carried out in-house costing studies and from those who experience difficulty in obtaining cost and time data for management purposes or who have encountered problems with methods and techniques.

Please contact Stephen Roberts at the Library Management Research Unit, Department of Library and Information Studies, Loughborough University, Loughborough, LE11 3TU, United Kingdom, 0509-63171, Ext. 312.

Mr. Turow, Assistant Professor of Communications at Purdue University, finds in children's book publishing a fruitful area in which to explore certain ideas related to mass communication. Despite the great quantity of material currently available on children's literature, some basic questions about the books youngsters read have until now been virtually ignored. What activities are carried out by publishing firms in their choosing, producing, and marketing of children's books? What guidelines direct their activities? Why are the titles—and the publishing imprints—found in school and public libraries often so different from the ones found in bookstores and department stores? How do the interactions between librarians and editors, between publishers' representatives and bookstore agents, influence the types of books produced and the titles that end up on library and bookstore shelves?

In Getting Books to Children, Turow finds among children's books publishers two distinct kinds of organizations, each dependent on particular kinds of client relationships for its survival. Each type of relationship entails corresponding differences in the organization of the firms and in the kind of material they publish. Buyers for mass market bookstores require that the juvenile works they purchase sell themselves and so stay with the accepted classics or the popular "lines," laced as they are with the better known titles. Children's librarians, by contrast, emphasize quality in their acquisitions rather than what is inexpensive or formulaic. The close relationships editors and promotion personnel establish with key library systems, coordinators, review media personnel, and library school teachers give the more innovative children's book publishers strong leverage in molding tastes and guiding the definition of quality.

While Turow makes very specific use of children's book publishing in his client-relationship model, he is aware of its general value and frequently makes comparisons with related situations in other media, particularly children's television.
