Needed: Academic librarians to fight cuts to library funding

The Government Printing Office (GPO) and the Federal Depository Library Program (FDLP) are slated for the largest cuts in a FY2001 legislative branch appropriations bill, if the budget numbers passed in a May 9 vote by the full House Appropriations Committee prevail. In a strict party line vote the House leadership took aim at GPO, which could receive a 25.3% cut if the House FY2001 appropriations numbers prevail ($77 million less than FY2000).

This would translate into a 60% cut to the FDLP and would eliminate printed and other tangible formats, forcing federal government information at depository libraries to be only available electronically. GPO would no longer print the U.S. Code; it would only be available online or by purchase, likely at great expense, through private sources.

Legislative branch appropriations also include the Library of Congress (LC), the Government Accounting Office (GAO), the Capitol Hill Police, and other agencies. Propponents of the cuts cite this year's budget resolution (H. Con. Res. 290) to justify these cuts.

At LC, the House appropriators proposed deep cuts for the Copyright Office and the Congressional Research Service, which could both lose significant numbers of staff. The Copyright Office could receive a $5 million dollar cut from its $12 million appropriated budget. This could possibly eliminate 130 of the approximately 520 jobs in the Copyright Office. There may also be less funding than needed in the digital future projects at the LC. The impact of these cuts on GPO and LC and their services to the American public have been summarized in recent ALAWONs.

As we go to press, the House legislative branch appropriations bill could go to the House floor sometime during May. (There is no bill number at this writing.) The ALA online Legislative Action Center (LAC) can provide sample letters and further background on this issue. The LAC can be used to generate e-mail and/or letters to Congress and allows users to customize the sample letters or write their own.

The ALA Office of Government Relations has also written various ALAWONs about this critical situation. For further background information see ALAWON, Volume 9, Nos. 42, 41, 40, and 36.

Academic librarians are asked to write letters, make calls and send e-mail to their senators and representatives. Invite them into depository libraries and other academic libraries that use depository materials during the Memorial Day Congressional Recess and other recess times in the coming weeks. Supporters should also ask depository library users to express their concerns. Researchers, local governments, and the business community as well as professors, students, and the general public are all consumers of federal government information.

Our congressional officials must be engaged and understand these issues if they are to successfully oppose these cuts. They need to see firsthand that, while much government information is currently available electronically, there is still an extremely large percentage of government documents that are not currently or cannot be available online. More than 25,000 titles are only available from federal agencies in tangible formats. Titles like the U.S. Code cannot realistically be used online. We are not yet in a “paperless” society!

The American public's ability to access government information is severely threatened by these cuts. It is the library community that must rally to save this important resource for all citizens. Annotated Bibliography for English Studies

A Choice Outstanding Academic Title for 1999!

Visit our free demo site at http://abes.swets.nl

In the past two years, the Annotated Bibliography for English Studies has established itself as one of the leading research tools in the field. Its unique peer-reviewed annotations ensure that students, researchers and teachers alike can easily find their way to the literature they really need. Students and researchers in over twenty countries are already using ABES on an everyday basis.

ABES on CD-ROM was elected an Outstanding Academic Title for 1999 by Choice!

Since January 1999, ABES has also been available online. Swets & Zeitlinger Publishers have developed an online interface that retains the user-friendliness as well as the advanced search functionality of the CD-ROM. At no extra charge, ABES Online offers the added benefit of bi-monthly updates, allowing users to keep informed of the latest developments in their own field of interest.

The free ABES Online demo database (containing a representative selection of records from the full database) may be accessed from our homepage at http://abes.swets.nl.

Alternatively, free one-month trial access is available from the publishers. Send your request to odekkers@swets.nl.

Quotes from the review in Choice, February 1999:

"Because it is selective, ABES can be a useful addition to libraries that already own Annual Bibliography of English Language and Literature or MLA's International Bibliography."

"The length of its annotations (up to 250 words) also makes ABES unique."

"The CD-ROM is easy to use and... is highly recommended for all academic libraries supporting English studies."
