DIGITAL LIBRARY DIRECTOR
University of Minnesota Libraries-Twin Cities Campus

The University of Minnesota Libraries seeks an individual who will provide innovative and dynamic leadership in advancing the Libraries' technological and digital presence in the University and beyond. The Digital Library Director will plan and implement digital initiatives and will have responsibility for a variety of issues associated with digital technology including, but not limited to, intellectual property, access management, imaging, digital archiving, content development, technical infrastructure, and intellectual accessibility and service issues. The director will be advised and assisted by the Digital Library Steering Committee, whose membership includes University faculty, administrators, and library staff.

The Digital Library Director reports to the University Librarian and is a member of the Libraries' leadership team. This individual will have a principal role in integrating the Libraries' digital initiatives with the work of the University's Digital Technology Center (DTC), a new $55 million facility, to be located in the renovated Walter Library. The DTC will house research facilities in such areas as data mining, digital asset management, Internet 2, genomics and informatics, e-commerce, network design and development, and wireless connectivity. The Digital Library Director will work closely with these academic and research programs and with the University's Office of Information Technology and Chief Information Officer.

The Digital Library Director will assist in representing the Libraries externally, working with organizations like the Digital Library Federation, Library of Congress, OCLC, Research Libraries Group, Consortium for Institutional Cooperation (CIC), and with individual partner institutions. Within the University, this individual will take the lead in relating the Libraries to programs and activities of DTC faculty as well as the digital initiatives of faculty who are not associated with the DTC. Included in this role is education of faculty on how the Libraries can contribute to their digital research agendas. Within the Libraries, the Digital Library Director will be assisted by the Digital Projects Coordinator and staff from other teams within the Libraries and will provide creative leadership in this expanding and important area.

The Digital Library Director should have an understanding of the potential for enhanced digital library services; demonstrated experience in using new technologies and applying them to library services and collections; knowledge of and success with external funding sources; experience in building partnerships with technology vendors; and managerial expertise commensurate with advanced technical knowledge.

QUALIFICATIONS: Required: Advanced degree in library science, information science, or computer science or other appropriate field; at least five years of progressively more advanced responsibilities in digital technology applications; excellent written and verbal communication skills; success in proposal writing and grantsmanship; ability to work in a team-based organization; experience in project management; demonstrated leadership ability; knowledge of library and research advances in digital technology; and an understanding of industry developments and directions. Preferred: Undergraduate degree in the sciences, and a second master's degree.

SALARY AND BENEFITS: This is a full-time, 12-month academic administrative appointment. Salary is very competitive, commensurate with qualifications. Excellent benefits and substantial moving allowance.

The Princeton University Library seeks an energetic and innovative librarian to serve as Assistant Population Research Librarian. The candidate selected will join the Population Research Librarian and one special collections assistant in serving the library needs of the Office of Population Research as well as the needs of other social scientists in the Library.

The Population Research Library houses 35,000 monographs, 15,000 reprints, 4,500 microfilms, and 12,000 pamphlets and subscribes to over 300 journals. It also provides several local databases to its users. Princeton University Library has an overall collection of over 6 million volumes, 34,000 print journal subscriptions, over 400 electronic journals, and over 250 networked databases.

The Office of Population Research at Princeton University has been preeminent in the field of formal demography, in particular the development of the model life tables and stable population models. In recent years, the research portfolio of OPR has been broadened and now reflects growing involvement in areas such as population and environment, poverty and child well being, health and mortality, demographic anthropology, social and economic demography, and statistical and mathematical demography. Princeton OPR faculty associates maintain strong ties with other social scientists in Princeton and throughout the world.

DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES: Our ideal candidate for this position will be a librarian with strong skills in social science and population reference work, as well as enthusiasm for new methods of organizing, accessing, and delivering data resources. The Assistant Population Research Librarian will be responsible for providing reference service to faculty and students using both electronic and print resources, for library bibliographic and electronic resources instruction, and for maintaining the OPR Library’s Web site. In addition, the Assistant Librarian is responsible for locally cataloging a large variety of material, both electronic and print, and for ensuring that access to electronic OPR data collections is maintained through an appropriate approach to metadata and archiving. The Assistant Librarian also helps maintain a local tracking database for all types of archival records.
