Guidelines for Academic Status for College and University Librarians

The final version approved by the ACRL Board on June 18, 2002, and the ALA Standards Review Committee in summer 2002

Prepared by the Committee on the Status of Academic Librarians

In 1971, ACRL adopted the “Standards for Faculty Status of College and University Librarians” (revised 2001). ACRL supports faculty rank, status, and tenure for librarians and has developed the following documents in support of this concept:

1. ACRL “Guidelines and Procedures for Screening and Appointment of Academic Librarians” (1977), currently under revision.
2. ACRL/AAUP/AAC “Joint Statement on Faculty Status of College and University Librarians” (1972).

ACRL also has developed the following guidelines for academic librarians without faculty status to ensure that their rights, privileges, and responsibilities reflect their integral role in the mission of their institutions.

Professional responsibilities. Librarians should be assigned responsibilities matched to their educational competencies and interests. They should have maximum latitude in fulfilling their responsibilities. Supervisory personnel and peers should regularly and vigorously review their performance. Review standards and procedures should be published and uniformly applied; reviewers should have access to all appropriate documentation.

Governance. The library exists to support the teaching and research functions of the institution. Thus librarians should also participate in the development of the institution’s mission, curriculum, and governance. Librarians should participate in the development of policies and procedures for their library, including the hiring, review, retention, and continuing appointment of their peers.

Contracts. A librarian’s appointment should be by written contract of no less than one year. The contract should state the terms and conditions of service and grant security of employment for the contractual period. After a period of no longer than seven years and through a process which includes peer review, librarians should be granted continuing employment if they have met the appropriate conditions and standards.

Compensation. The salary scale and benefits for librarians should be the same as for other academic categories with equivalent education, experience, or responsibility.

Promotion and salary increases. Librarians should be promoted through ranks on the basis of their professional proficiency and effectiveness. Procedures for promotion and salary increases should include a peer review. Librarians should have ranks equivalent to those of the faculty.

Leaves and research funds. Librarians should be eligible for internal and external research funds, leaves of absence, sabbaticals, and other means of administrative support to promote their active participation in research and other professional activities.
Development and revision of the guidelines

In January 2000, the Standards and Accreditation Committee (SAC) referred two documents to the Committee on the Status of Academic Librarians for revision: “Standards for Faculty Status of College and University Librarians” and “Guidelines for Academic Status for College and University Libraries.” SAC also asked that consideration be given to combining the two documents.

After much discussion, it was concluded that the documents should remain separate, primarily because: 1) they address entirely different issues and it would cause confusion to combine the concepts into a single document; 2) it would weaken the argument for improvement at those institutions that do award limited faculty status to librarians; and 3) librarians at institutions with no hope of faculty status would have no clear guidelines to support improvement within their status.

7. Academic freedom. Librarians are entitled to the protection of academic freedom as set forth in the American Association of University Professors 1940 Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure.

8. Dismissal or nonreappointment. The institution may dismiss a librarian during the contractual period only for just cause and through academic due process. Nonreappointment should involve adequate notice, peer review, and access to a grievance procedure.

9. Grievance. Librarians should have access to grievance procedures. These should include steps to be completed within specified time limits and effective safeguards against reprisal by the institution, or abuse of the procedures by the grievant. They must be consistent with applicable institutional regulations and contracts.

Need to develop a plan to support distance ed? Take ACRL's new online course

ACRL is pleased to announce its first online seminar, “All Users Are Local: Bringing the Library Next Door to the Campus Worldwide.” In this three-week course (November 4 through November 23), participants will learn how to design a plan for library support of distance education at their institutions.

Walk away with the tools to create a comprehensive plan. By the end of the seminar, participants will be able to complete an institutional self-assessment on current involvement and future plans for distance education; assess current library support and set future goals; identify staff and funding needs and sources for future support; identify current and possible future features of a library’s Web site for faculty, students, and staff at distant locations; and analyze administrative, design, and content issues with regard to their impact on the library’s website.

Register today. If you are a library director or department head responsible for library support of established distance education programs or at an institution in the process of developing distance education programs, this course is for you. An online registration form is available at: https://cs.ala.org/acrl/courses/. The seminar is limited to 60 participants, so register early. For more information about this online education opportunity, visit: http://www.ala.org/acrl/online1.html.
