It's statistics time again! I know you're all hoping to see Library Statistics of Colleges and Universities, 1967-68; Data for Individual Institutions at midwinter ALA the week of January 26 here in Washington. Mr. Joel Williams of the National Center for Educational Statistics is hoping even harder that the report will be ready for you, in the new olive green covers that have been designed for all NCES publications in the Library Series.

The scheduling of this report had some very strict deadlines which had to be stringently enforced, if the publication were to be issued on time. Although the form contained the notation that it was to be completed and returned by October 1, only 700 out of a possible total of 2,500 had been returned by that date. Duplicate forms stamped "Second Request" were sent to nonresponding librarians on October 3, and another set of forms stamped "Third Request" went to nonrespondents in mid-October. By November 4, the total of forms received had climbed to 2,000, or 80 per cent.

However, each form required complex processing. It was carefully examined for errors and inconsistencies. Since October 1, the staff of NCES has written about 300 letters and probably made about 150 telephone calls to librarians in order to clear up problems. Thereafter, the statistics were keypunched and examined again, for errors and inconsistencies—this time on the computer. Naturally, this series of checks can result in the exclusion of numerous reports from the institutional listing.

NCES has made a valiant effort to include as many institutions as possible in order to present a widespread representation of academic libraries. By November 26, the deadline for this phase of the project, statistics for about 1,880 libraries (nearly 75 per cent of the 2,500 forms sent out) had been edited and keypunched.

What of the remaining reports? NCES will certainly use them. The staff is interested in a complete response from all academic libraries because it intends to publish an Analytic Report in the spring. This report will represent the totality of libraries and will present national summary tables.

When the NCES distributed the Preliminary Report on Academic Libraries, 1966-67 last January, it promised you a complete report on individual institutional data by June. You must be wondering what happened. As you may remember, the original report included data on only 395 libraries. The complete report has been in the computer area for some time. Although the report has been given top priority by the Center, there have been unavoidable delays in the tabulating process. The data processing group, which is outside the Center, has reassured Mrs. Dorothy M. Gilford, the new Assistant Commissioner for Educational Statistics, that it is taking steps to expedite future publications through the use of contractual services, as has been done with the 1967-68 report.

Since Mrs. Gilford's arrival in May, she has placed an increased emphasis on the production of library statistics by the establishment of a new branch and the recruitment of a librarian staff member.

If you wish to discuss your library's statistics as they appear in Data for Institutional Libraries, call on Mrs. Doris Holladay or Dr. Bronson Price while you're in Washington. Mrs. Holladay is in room 1010 at 400 Maryland Avenue, SW, and Dr. Price is across the hall in room 1013. His phone number is 962-7443 and Mrs. Holladay's is 983-7708. And if you were one of those librarians who didn't make the October 1 deadline, do give the NCES staff a word of thanks for being patient with you.

The publishers of Encyclopaedia Britannica announce a new program to develop

A SERIES OF RESOURCE AND RESEARCH LIBRARIES in

ULTRAMICROFICHE (UMF)

First library in the series will be the

20,000-Volume LIBRARY OF AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

This new series of UMF Resource and Research Libraries will make it possible to offer important resources from the world's most distinguished libraries—including rare and out-of-print items—at a fraction of the cost of a comparable conventional library. It is anticipated that these new Britannica UMF Libraries will be well within the means of every college and university.

Advantages of New Ultramicrofiche Technology

UMF is a refinement of microfiche, which permits greater miniaturization of anything in printed form with great precision and clarity. So, instead of 60 to 100 page images per fiche, it is now possible to carry up to 3,000 images per fiche. The most obvious benefits of this new technology include greatly reduced acquisition cost and far less space required for UMF than conventional book or periodical storage. Additional advantages include the possibility of centralized selection, cataloging and indexing—thus achieving greater retrieval efficiency than is currently attained with books, manuscripts, newspapers and the like.

The principal goals of Britannica's UMF program are:

- to produce a library series, in this form, of such scope, quality and low cost as to establish UMF as a standard library medium;
- to provide full bibliographic support for each UMF Library.

Britannica's Comprehensive Editorial Plan assures that each library will be a definitive and highly useful collection. The first Library in the UMF series—the Library of American Civilization—and subsequent Libraries will be made up of materials selected by area specialists according to strict criteria, and will include complete catalogs, topical bibliographies and research guides.

Pages from The Annals of America, new 20-volume chronological collection of American source materials (1493 to present), which will be included in UMF form with The Library of American Civilization.
The Library of American Civilization will cover all aspects of America's culture from the beginning up to 1914, and will encompass every significant point of view. While major emphasis will be on American history—political, economic, social, cultural, legal and scientific—the Library will also contain material of use and interest to departments of English and American literature and in subject areas as diverse as government, economics, law and the lively arts.

Future UMF Libraries (including those currently planned on Medieval Civilization, European History, Renaissance and Reformation Studies, International Affairs, Science, Technology, Art, and African and Oriental Studies) will be covered with equal thoroughness.

BLACK POWER AND CHRISTIAN RESPONSIBILITY
C. Freeman Sleeper. Using the concept of black power as a central ethical problem, Dr. Sleeper shows how this can help us see the biblical text in a new and fruitful way. He also shows how the Bible can provide important insights for this crucial struggle for justice in American life. This book successfully bridges the gap between biblical studies and ethics and between theory and practice. Index. $4.50

SCIENCE, SECULARIZATION, AND GOD
Kenneth Cauthen. In a levelheaded affirmation of a transcendent God, the author argues the credibility of Christian faith, from a standpoint of an appreciation of science and modern philosophy. He strives for a meaningful interpretation of creation and a theology that sees Christ as the clue to understanding cosmos as well as history. Dr. Cauthen effectively points to a theology of and for the future. Index. $5.50

THE INNOVATOR AND OTHER MODERN PARABLES
G. William Jones; woodcuts by Robert O. Hodgell. Twenty-one contemporary parables and fourteen woodcuts—pictorial parables in themselves—speak to the concerns of modern man. Whether talking about a prisoner or priest, a medicine man or a merchant, the author penetrates the reader's defenses and leaves a lasting impression. Discussion questions at the conclusion lead to in-depth study. Paper, $1.75
