
Legends offers "a personal journey through the worlds of Robin Hood, King Arthur, D'Artagnan, and other swashbuckling characters of balladry, fiction, and film, from the shores of Avalon to the dungeons of Zenda." The site promises "guided access to primary source material and up-to-date scholarship, personal essays and extended reviews, and historical surveys and thoughtful commentary." A view of the links under the general heading "King Arthur and the Matter of Britain" shows that Legends delivers on this promise.

On the King Arthur page, the researcher will find a link to TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages) Middle English texts, containing many primary Arthurian sources. "History & Archaeology" not only provides an overview of England during the Dark Ages, but also includes the article "The Historicity and Historisation of Arthur," a scholarly summation of the current debate on the historical Arthur by Thomas Green of Exeter College in Oxford, England. Further links—"Arthur," "Gawain," "Guenevere," "Percival," "Merlin," "Tristan & Isult," and "Elaine of Astolat"—offer lengthy, scholarly articles, each with helpful bibliographies of print sources. Sir Thomas Malory's Le Mort D'Arthur is the source of the Arthurian sagas, as we know them today. More information about Malory and the redactional history of his works would have been helpful.

Legends is not confined strictly to English-language source material. The link "Sagas and Sea-Kings" from the homepage contains a translation of "The Story of the Volsungs" from the 13th-century Icelandic Edda. Under this general heading we also find "The Nibelungenlied" and other links and synopses to Wagner's Ring Cycle. From the homepage, "Paladins and Princes" will link the researcher to "Chanson de Roland" in both Old French and English translation. "Orlando Furioso" and "The Cid" are also found under this link. Also on the homepage, "Erin and Alba" provides a corpus of early Irish tales in various medieval compilations.

Anyone interested in European and English folklore and mythology will find a treasure trove of fascinating and scholarly information in Legends. The site is easy to navigate, with obvious links and helpful annotations, but a few of the sublinks are broken. Finally, the Legends site offers "romance, adventure, and panache." Legends is that rare site, offering scholarly information to the undergraduate student, and, at the same time, entertaining and useful background information for the general user.—Wendell Johnson, Waubonsee Community College, wjohnson@waubonsee.edu

Developed in collaboration with the Online Books Page, a Celebration of Women Writers is both a database and a portal of materials by and about women authors. The purpose of the site is to promote awareness of the variety of women writers and the depth of their writings. This is done by developing and providing free "on-line editions of older, often rare, out-of-copyright works" and links to specialty collections. Also available are links to biographical and bibliographical information.

In 2001, Celebration contained 10,347 women writers, links to 5,320 pages about women authors, and 2,983 online books. Of those online books (all of which are in the public domain or for which permission has been given by the copyright holders), 170 were transcribed and proofread by Celebration volunteers. The remaining 2,813 available works come from sources such as Project Gutenberg, Making of America, Victorian Women Writers Project, American Memory, and Digital Schomburg.
A Celebration of Women Writers

Celebration's usability is relatively straightforward. Browsing by author, country, century, and ethnicity is available. In "What's Local," one can also browse the online books that have been transcribed by Celebration volunteers and listed by author or category. Using the site's search engine is another option. Not only can one search by name, birth and death dates, and country, but also by a time period in which the writer lived. This is especially useful for that patron who needs to find an author from the 60s.

About half of the entries are that, only entries. There is no information or links to online resources, just names and dates. More complete, biographical information could be found in reference sources such as The Bloomsbury Guide to Women's Literature. The site is most useful for its full-text editions of older, out-of-copyright materials. Celebration is continually putting these books online, so the site is still growing.

The look of the site is plain but easy to use, although several links to outside sources did not work. It is a good, secondary resource of online information. While the site does not replace conventional print resources, it does contain valuable information, an ever-expanding collection, and some very useful search functions.—Cassandra E. Osterloh, University of New Mexico, osterloh@unm.edu

Agriculture Network Information Center (AgNIC) is hosted by a partnership between the National Agricultural Library and various universities, government agencies, and organizations within the agricultural community. The AgNIC partnership was formed in 1998 to act as a portal for agricultural information. Each partner is responsible for accumulating and maintaining information in designated subject areas.

This site offers three main search strategies: keyword (simple and advanced), thesau-
Visit the American Economic Association at The ACRL Conference Booth 326!

Learn about...
Electronic access to the AEA journals for libraries, institutions, and firms!

The 2002 issues of the American Economic Review, Journal of Economic Literature, and Journal of Economic Perspectives are now online! Site license access includes reference links (updated daily) to full-text articles through CrossRef, links to full-text articles citing AEA articles, table of contents alerts, and searchable full-text. Site licenses will include all years from 2002 forward so long as a subscription is active!

Please see www.aeaweb.org/subscribe.html for terms and conditions as well as site license usage guidelines. Contact the AEA or your subscription agent to add an electronic site license to the AEA journals today!

Site License price as of 1/1/2003 (includes all 3 AEA online journals)...........................$195.00

Ask about...

EconLit — The foremost bibliographic database in economics is linked to full-text now more than ever!

EconLit records include links to the URLs of journal publishers. Direct full-text linking options are available from all EconLit vendors:

- CSA
- Dialog
- Ebsco
- OCLC
- OVID/SilverPlatter
- ScienceDirect

Visit Booth 326 at the Association of College & Research Libraries 11th National Conference, Charlotte, N.C.
April 10-12, 2003

The American Economic Association
4615 Fifth Avenue
Pittsburgh, PA 15213-3661, USA
info@econlit.org
Preconferences at the ACRL 11th National Conference

Open Access 101: What, Why, and How You Can Make It a Reality
Sponsored by SPARC & ACRL Scholarly Communications Committee
Thursday, April 10 • 9 a.m.–12 p.m. • Charlotte, North Carolina

Hear from the leaders of the scholarly communication reform movement regarding Creative Commons, Open Archives Initiative, and Budapest Open Access Initiative. Learn how the movement is transforming scholarly communication, gain information on leading efforts, and discuss the library’s role in open access.

New Ways of Listening to Library Users—LibQUAL+™
Thursday, April 10 • 9 a.m.–3:30 p.m. • Charlotte, North Carolina

Learn about the development of the ARL LibQUAL+™ survey for assessing service quality and how to use it in your library. Review the survey process and examine local applications of LibQUAL+™. This preconference workshop is intended for library administrators and others interested in assessment.

Visit ARL & SPARC at booths 424 & 426 at the ACRL Conference!

Other Training Opportunities from ARL

Advanced XML Workshop
April 16–18 • Charlottesville, Virginia

Accessible Web Design—New Course Design!
April 21–May 9 • ARL/OLMS Online Lyceum

Library Conflict Management
April 28–May 16 • ARL/OLMS Online Lyceum

Service Quality Evaluation Academy
May 12–16 • San Antonio, Texas

Assessment for Advancing Diversity in Libraries
May 12–30 • ARL/OLMS Online Lyceum

Coaching for Performance
May 14–June 6 • ARL/OLMS Online Lyceum

Register now! Visit <http://www.arl.org/arl/workshops.html>