A social sciences reference tool that's easy to use, highly current,
and multidisciplinary too!

It's a lot easier to search the social sciences journal literature when your library has the Social Sciences Citation Index™ (SSCI™).

The index that offers an integrated search system designed to overcome the ambiguous terminology and wide scatter of related articles that used to make social science searches so difficult. The SSCI takes advantage of two powerful retrieval methods:
Citation Indexing—which utilizes the fact that an article's reference
citations to earlier publications are excellent indicators of the subject of the article, and Permuterm® Indexing—a natural language system that pairs every significant word in an article's title with every other word in that title to produce extremely specific, two-level indexing entries.

With SSCI, all you need to start a search on any subject is the name of a key author in the field of interest or any English word that is descriptive of the subject. There's no need to master specialized search vocabularies or complex classification
schemes.

With SSCI you don't have to use a half-dozen discipline-oriented indexes to assure comprehensive searches. A single look-up lets you search the entire output of over 1,400
journals from all the fields relevant to the social sciences including
anthropology, community health, demography,
economics, educational research, ethnic group
studies, geography,
history, law, linguistics,
management, marketing,
political science,
psychiatry, psychology,
sociology, statistics, and urban planning and development.

And because SSCI is computer-produced, it's the most current index of it's size—the one you find new articles in while they're still new.
