The Best of OPL II: Selected Readings from The One Person Library, a Newsletter for Librarians and Management, edited by Andrew Berner and Guy St. Clair (336 pages, February 1996), offers practical advice to librarians who must singlehandedly manage an information center. Among the topics included are: absenteeism in the OPL, overcoming procrastination, the empowered librarian, disaster planning, when unsolicited materials get out of hand, and promoting the reference collection. $43.50 (SLA members, $34.50). Special Libraries Assn., 1700 Eighteenth St., N.W., Washington, DC 20009-2508. ISBN 0-87111-438-0.

Blast from the Past: A Pictorial History of Radio's First 75 Years, by B. Eric Rhoads (463 pages, January 1996), chronicles the radio broadcasting industry from Marconi to Frasier Crane. It’s ironic that the excitement of a purely audio medium is captured so well by the more than 900 photographs in this book, many of them discovered in personal collections by the author and published here for the first time. Radio was the world's first multimedia, however, with the visual imagery supplied by the listener's imagination, as Paul Harvey reminds us in the introduction. The book's commentary is brief but substantial as it winds around the many pictures and captions. A directory of museums, organizations, and publications devoted to radio history rounds out the text.

Canadian Business Handbook, by Vivienne Monty (304 pages, February 1996), is a practical guide for setting up a small business in Canada. Monty, senior librarian at York University and former president of the Canadian Library Association, offers some tips that are valid for businesses in any country—marketing and sales cost-cutting techniques, a financial reality test, negotiating a franchise contract—and much of the material will be useful for U.S. firms doing business with Canadian companies. $34.95 Canadian. CCH Canadian, Ltd., 6 Garamond Court, North York, Ontario, Canada M3C 1Z5. ISBN 1-55141-753-7.

The Great Comet Crash: The Collision of Comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 and Jupiter, edited by John R. Spencer and Jacqueline Mitton (118 pages, September 1995), documents the cometary collision of July 1994 with abundant astronomical images and speculation on what might have happened if Earth had been the target. The fact that the zones of destruction on Jupiter greatly exceeded the size of our own planet (despite nearly everyone's predictions to the contrary) dramatized the need to take such collisions or near-collisions very seriously. The salient facts of comet SL9 are summarized here—including the estimation that the object had begun to orbit Jupiter sometime between 1914 and 1930. An eye-opening object lesson that reminds us of the dynamics of the solar system and our vulnerability to extraterrestrial forces. $24.95. Nightsong: Performance, Power, and Practice in South Africa, by Veit Erlmann (446 pages, 1996), describes the politics and provenance of isicathamiya music in South Africa, the unaccompanied vocal song that gained international recognition through the efforts of Paul Simon and Ladysmith Black Mambazo in the 1980s. Erlmann starts with the roots of the music which, like American jazz, sprung from minstrel shows and ragtime. He goes on to examine its contemporary power in Zulu society and the forces that shaped it. An extensive discography and bibliography supplement the text. $75.00. University of Chicago Press, 11030 S. Langley Ave., Chicago, IL 60628. ISBN 0-226-21720-5.

Weathering the Storm: Tornadoes, Television, and Turmoil, by Gary A. England (225 pages, 1996), contains veteran weather forecaster England's reminiscences of his career at station KWTV in Oklahoma City and describes his efforts to obtain Doppler radar so that the residents of "Tornado Alley" might have more time to seek shelter from dangerous storms. Fifty-five color photographs of midwestern twisters punctuate his meteorological memoirs, which are as much about tempestuous TV politics as tornadoes. Anecdotal but informative. $26.95. University of Oklahoma Press, 1005 Asp Ave., Norman, OK 73019. ISBN 0-8061-2823-2. ■
