DMCA abuse
Since 2011, more than 4 billion links have been sent to Google for removal to comply with the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA). A Wall Street Journal investigation found that many “individuals or companies, often using apparently fake identities, caused (Google) to remove links to unfavorable articles and blog posts that alleged wrongdoing by convicted criminals, foreign officials and businesspeople… manipulating the system in ways it didn’t intend. After the Journal shared its findings with Google, the company conducted a review and restored more than 52,000 links it determined it had improperly removed.”
