Back to Europe

ACRL at the 53rd Frankfurt Book Fair

by Dale Askey and Thea Lindquist

For the third year running, American librarians have represented ACRL at the Frankfurt Book Fair, the world's largest fair for books and electronic media. At the 53rd annual fair, which took place October 10–15, 2001, in Frankfurt am Main, Germany, representatives welcomed scores of visitors from around the world to the ACRL exhibit in the International Booksellers' and Librarians' Centre (IBLC).

At this moment in history, when American freedoms are being critically challenged, our presence in Frankfurt as librarians from the world's most open society took on an enhanced sense of importance and relevance.

Sharing our professional spirit and sense of purpose, we invited librarians, vendors, publishers, students, and other visitors from around the world to learn not only about the dynamic environment and mission of U.S. college and research libraries, but also about how free libraries are the bedrock of a democracy.

The fair has a long and proud tradition dating back to the latter 15th century. First held on the Römerberg, the city's central square, it is not only the largest but also the oldest fair devoted to books in the world. Although overtaken by Leipzig in the mid-17th century as the center of the international book trade, Frankfurt regained its preeminence in the postwar years by reestablishing the fair as we know it in 1949. For more than a half-century, Frankfurt has been the place to display and discover the world's publishing output and the barometer for new trends in the publishing world.

The 53rd Frankfurt Book Fair

The fair was held on the vast campus of the Frankfurt Convention Center or Messegelände. Its soaring office tower is a familiar landmark in the city skyline. The fair offered a broad view of new paper and electronic publications, as well as current trends in literature, media, science, and scholarship. Altogether, well over 6,500 companies from 105 countries, including almost 2,500 German publishers, showcased their wares at the fair. Nearly 400,000 books were presented during

About the authors

Dale Askey is reference and Web services librarian at University of Utah, e-mail: daskey@library.utah.edu, and Thea Lindquist is history and Germanic language and literature librarian at University of Colorado at Boulder, e-mail: thea.lindquist@colorado.edu the fair, roughly a quarter of which were first editions. Frankfurt is also the world's largest venue for e-publishing, and the trend towards electronic publications at the fair was on the rise.

Despite the September 11 attacks, most American exhibitors attended the event. Repercussions, however, were evident in increased security throughout the convention halls. In addition to the wide range of publisher exhibits, the fair offered everything from cultural and literary exhibits featuring Greece, this year's guest of honor, to various award ceremonies.

German Minister of Culture Julian Nida-Rümelin, standing in for Chancellor Gerhard Schröder, opened the event with President Constantinos Stephanopoulos and Angelos Delivorrias, Greece's representatives in Frankfurt. During the fair, many events and exhibitions dedicated to presenting and promoting Greek letters abroad were underway. More than 70 Greek publishers and organizations were on hand to present their products in Hall 5, and publishers from other countries offered titles by Greek authors.

Also, the first level of the newly built "Forum" was dedicated to a wide-ranging exhibition illustrating Grecian culture and literature. This forum hosted a series of readings, panel discussions, musical performances, literary workshops, book presentations, and film screenings during the fair. Exhibits with Greek themes were also on display in many of Frankfurt's museums and galleries.2

In recognition of the increasingly important role of electronic publications, the Second Annual Frankfurt eBook Awards were given to recognize achievements in the emerging ebook industry. The grand prize in nonfiction was awarded to Steven Levy for Crypto and in fiction to Amitav Ghosh for The Glass Palace. Eminent German philosopher and sociologist Jürgen Habermas was selected as this year's laureate for the Peace Prize of the German Book Trade, which is awarded to an individual who has contributed in an outstanding way to world peace.

The IBLC

The IBLC creates a space in the center of the Frankfurt Book Fair where librarians, publishers, vendors, and representatives from academic institutions can gather to exchange information and ideas. This year's IBLC boasted diverse representation from organizations and firms, such as Ex Libris, the German library consortium HeBIS, University of Regensbury Library, and the Zentrales Verzeichnis Antiquarischer Bücher, Germany's largest online source for used books.

The ACRL exhibit, strategically located in the IBLC, promoted the publications, services, and benefits of membership in ACRL and the Western European Studies Section (WESS) to colleagues from around the world. During the five-day event, many of the fair's halls were crowded with visitors, particularly on days when it was open to the general public. The IBLC, while located directly adjacent to many of these highly trafficked halls, offered a quieter, yet active, forum for those in the ACRL exhibit to congregate and converse with librarians, vendors, and visitors in the area.

Five American librarians, with generous support from ACRL and the IBLC, were on hand to organize and staff the ACRL exhibit. Gordon Anderson (University of Kansas), Jeffrey Garrett (Northwestern University), and Margot Sutton (ACRL) generously assisted with the pre-fair preparations.

The five official representatives—Dale Askey (University of Utah), Helene Baumann (Duke University), Thea Lindquist (University of Colorado at Boulder), Beth Remak-Honnef (University of California-Santa Cruz), and Susanne Roberts (Yale University)—were willingly aided by many of their WESS colleagues at the booth for the duration of the fair. Among them were Roger Brisson (Harvard University), James Burgett (University of Kentucky), Hilde Calvert (Ball State University), Beau David Case (Ohio State University), Diane D’Almeida (Boston University), Denise Hibay (New York Public Library), Gail Hueting (University of Illinois), Mike Olson (Harvard University), Marcia Pankake (University of Minnesota), and Heleni Pedersoli (University of Maryland). All told, there were approximately 25 ACRL members at the fair.

Visitors to the exhibit received a warm welcome from ACRL members eager to discuss American academic librarianship and answer questions. They had the opportunity to peruse issues of ACRL publications, such as Choice, College and Research Libraries,
USA Day
A special feature of this year’s IBLC was USA Day, a series of talks by ACRL librarians on aspects of American librarianship given in the IBLC Forum.3 Topics included library organization, collaborative collection development, distance learning, bibliographic instruction, and the German Resources Project, an Association of Research Libraries initiative. Colleagues from around the world attended and asked questions that were insightful, instructive, and generated lively discussion among the group on topics of mutual interest.

In the wake of the terrorist attacks in September, it was heartening to receive the support and sympathy of so many international colleagues.4 On October 11, at the exact time that the World Trade Center was attacked a month earlier, there was a public call for a moment of silence to remember those who lost their lives in New York and Washington, D.C. Once again we were all reminded of how tightly knit and caring the library world is.

IBLC symposium
The second annual IBLC symposium—“Competition and Cooperation: Universities, Libraries, and the Commercial Sector at the Beginning of the 21st Century”—explored various aspects of scholarly communication, such as copyright, licensing, and archiving of online journals. Speakers hailed from Germany, the United States, Hong Kong, the Netherlands, and Great Britain. Those from the United States included Andrew Odlyzko (University of Minnesota), Michael Keller (Stanford University), Ann Okerson (Yale University), and Mike Olson (Harvard University). Jeffrey Garrett also moderated the first day of the symposium.

Despite the wide geographic distribution of the speakers, it was evidently clear that in the modern global economy, librarians worldwide face the same issues and pressures from the recent changes in scholarly publishing. The IBLC symposium represented a rare opportunity to bring together experts from many countries to exchange ideas and propose solutions to these problems. As Garrett mentioned in his opening remarks at the symposium, the title contains what could appear to be—at least superficially—a contradiction, namely that competition and cooperation are both important aspects of the relationship between academia and industry. Library consortia cooperate with vendors to negotiate price breaks or to start initiatives, such as the Early English Books Online-Text Creation Partnership, while commercial ventures, such as Highwire Press, originate in libraries. Many of the papers presented at the symposium suggested creative ways for libraries and commercial interests to work together productively.

An invaluable experience for international librarians
As the largest annual gathering of publishers on the globe, the Frankfurt Book Fair provides a unique opportunity for librarians to make contacts with foreign vendors, view publications from numerous nations that do (continued on page 220)
The film’s impact on popular culture, its place in film history, and an essay on the life and career of director Victor Halperin. This massively documented work will please both academic film historians and horror-genre buffs, and it deserves to be emulated as a model for single-film scholarship in the future. $65.00. McFarland. ISBN 0-7864-0988-6.

The Women of Afghanistan under the Taliban, by Rosemarie Skaine (198 pages, March 2002), was mostly written prior to September 2001, though the author and publisher masterfully managed to squeeze in a few last-minute references to the United States counterattack and the Taliban’s then-uncertain future. Skaine catalogs the hardships and atrocities imposed by the regime on Afghan women, 30 of whom were interviewed in 2000 after they had fled the country. The final chapter summarizes the political and diplomatic efforts made by organizations and individuals in other countries to rebuild Afghan society and women’s roles within it. $29.95. McFarland. ISBN 0-7864-1090-6.

World War II in American Art, by Robert Henkes (157 pages, December 2001), analyzes the works of artists who experienced the intensity and emotion of the war firsthand, both in battle and on the homefront. Arranged by subject matter, the book includes sections on combat, the wounded, survivors, prisoners, ruins, the dead, religion, recreation, and victory. Many of the paintings depicted are housed in the collections of the Army, Navy, and Air Force museums, as well as the personal collection of artist Edward Reep, who wrote the foreword. $39.95. McFarland. ISBN 0-7864-0985-1.